Thessaloniki receives support from Amsterdam and Zurich on informal education for refugees

From 9-15 July, Thessaloniki hosted a delegation from Amsterdam and Zurich, as part of a mentoring visit organised by EURO.CITIES and Migration Work. The mentoring visit focused on the city's plan to create an overarching integration strategy and was prepared in the context of the Solidarity Cities Initiative with support from the Open Society Education Support Programme.

Thessaloniki, the second largest city in Greece, is home to thousands of refugees who were left stranded after the closure of the Balkan Road in March 2020. Several camps were opened around the city but the city also has several accommodation programmes in flats and hotels, either managed by the city authority itself or NGOs and international organisations.

Much like Athens, Thessaloniki is committed to making integration a positive experience for refugees and the host society. Yannis Boutaris, mayor of Thessaloniki, met with the delegation on 10 July to reaffirm the city's openness and its commitment to transforming its services and institutions. The deputy mayor for education and sports, Georgios Dimarellos and the councillor in charge of refugee policies Sofia Astaridou also met the delegation.

Mayor of Athens Georgios Kaminis addresses the parliamentary assembly of the council of Europe

"More than ever, European cities and local governments can play a crucial role in the protection of the rights of refugees and migrants, and their integration," today said the Mayor of Athens Georgios Kaminis, addressing the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe at the opening of a joint debate on migration.

Mr Kaminis reviewed the measures taken by his Municipality these latest years in order to tackle the refugee crisis: "We currently provide housing in 300 apartments rented by the Municipality, to secure decent living conditions for the refugees. Using European funds and donations we have created a Coordination Center for our city to provide a variety of services addressed to the people in need, gradually focusing on integration," he explained.

"The migration issue is here to stay and is far from being solved," Mr Kaminis warned. "Experience has shown that every delay or refusal to face this reality turns into a structural problem that is much harder to solve," he said, adding that it was a concern for all countries, equally. "The countries of entry cannot carry this heavy burden by themselves," he stated.

Solidarity Cities

"In the aftermath of a crisis which has created tension and undermined Europe's fundamental values, our cities have proven that they can offer solutions to the multiple implications of the refugee challenges and be the front-runners in promoting cohesiveness and mutual respect. Solidarity cities, initiated by the City of Athens, is our response to this crisis and our joint call for the need to have a renewed, stronger role in migration and refugee issues."

Solidarity Cities

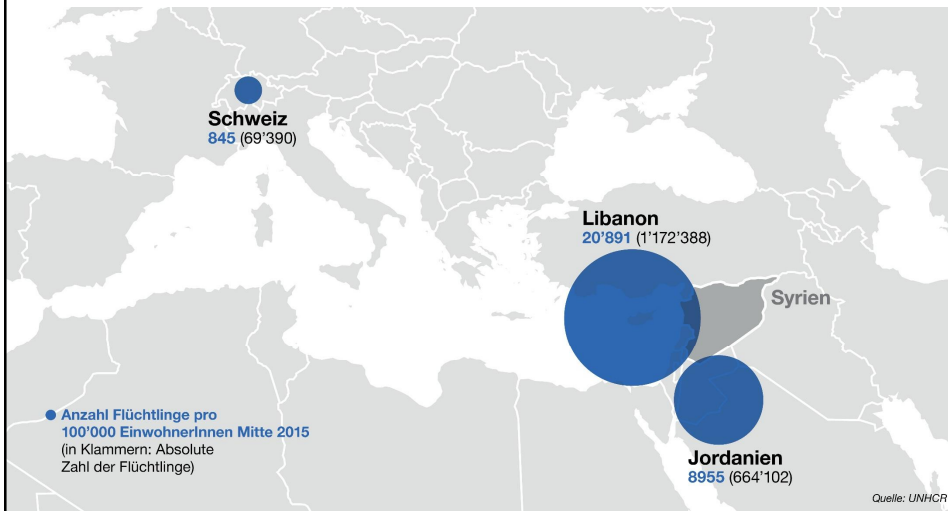

“Integration can only be accomplished by joint efforts, and its success or failure will shape the future of our cities. Solidarity is becoming ever more important - both as a value and in the form of actions. Zurich is an open city and a city of solidarity. I welcome Solidarity Cities as an important contribution to the successful integration of refugees in Europe.”
